To Try Again For State Apple Tax

Harrisburg, Jan. 28 (AP)—Pennsylvania fruit growers will make another fight in the 1951 Legislature to pass a one-cent-a-bushel apple tax to promote the apple industry in the state.

The state Horticultural Association passed a resolution at its annual meeting here yesterday to carry the issue to the next General Assembly.

Attempts were made in both the 1947 and 1949 Legislatures to pass an apple tax but other bills died in the Senate after winning approval in the House.

The revenue from the one-cent tax on all commercial apple production over 500 bushels per grower, would be used for research, promotion, marketing and other needs of the industry.

Brother Started Artist Kurtz On Career; Depression Brought Him To Adams County

A punch in the nose launched Frederic J. Kurtz, of Hunters-town, on his career as artist and painter.

Now, at 68, Mr. Kurtz is better known in New York art circles than he is in his adopted environment of Adams county, where he has lived for 17 years.

His home, "The Corner House," a short distance east of Hunters-town itself, is redolent of oils, canvases and the pigments he uses in his stained glass windows and panels.

The house, and the studio behind it, are filled with oils and water colors, and many of the leaded panes. Many of the paintings are of scenes in Adams county, several made close by his home. Most of them are sold or will be disposed of in New York city.

It is almost like being in another world to sit in one of Mr. Kurtz' old rocking chairs, with the fire in the old-fashioned stove sending forth its warmth, and the tea kettle singing an accompaniment, as the artist displays many of his works and tells their stories, and his own.

Victim of Depression

Mr. Kurtz settled in Adams county in 1932, victim, he admits, of the depression, which, however, could not take away his talents, although it removed his markets.

His mother, Elizabeth L. Maurier, was a concert singer of considerable renown, and Frederic was born near Macon, Ga., on one of her tours. Fifteen days later his parents brought him to New York, where he grew up in the "Hellgate" section.

When Frederic was six, a nine-year-old brother came home from school with a profile drawn on a slate. Frederic looked and looked. The profile somehow was not right. There was something the matter with the eye. The infant prodigy thought he knew what was the matter. He erased the old one and drew in the eye on the side, where it belonged, and for his pains got a punch in the nose when the older brother discovered how his "art" had been tampered with.

"From then on I drew things everywhere—on fences, on sidewalks and all over the house," Mr. Kurtz says.

But the career of a painter was not to be his without a few stumbling blocks which had to be overcome or by-passed. His mother wanted him to be a musician. An aunt offered to leave him all her money if he would become a priest.

Ran Away At 13

When most youngsters are still playing with their toys and going to school, Frederic went to work. He became an apprentice in a Greenwich Village firm which made everything from carpets to windows and returns for churches.

Then, at the age of 13, he ran away from home, with, however, the consent of what appears to have been a very understanding mother.

There will be four conferences. Theme for the adult group will be "Evangelism Through Christian Living." The Christian Education department will have a panel discussion on "Teaching Evangelism." WILL BURY BOY THIS AFTERNOON

More than 600 schoolmates, playmates, teachers, relatives and friends visited the J. W. Little and son funeral parlor, Littlestown, Friday evening to view the body of Richard Sharrer Ritter, seven-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Luther W. Ritter, 405 East King street, who was run down and instantly killed by a wingless plane, shortly after 5 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, which a neighbor, Paul Luckenbaugh was repairing, and which without warning broke loose from its mooring.

This afternoon at 1 o'clock, a brief service will be held at his late home, followed by a service in St. Paul's Lutheran church at 1:30 o'clock where the youth attended Sunday school and was a member of the junior choir. These services will be in charge of the pastor, Rev. David S. Kammerer, assisted by Rev. John C. Brumbach. There will be a selection by the junior choir. Pupils from the Littlestown third grade, attended by Richard, will attend the service in a body, accompanied by a delegation of teachers representing the four districts of the Littlestown School Jointure, of which the youth's father is the president.

Lee Krout, William Benner, Fred Miller, Leonard L. Potter, Jr., Larry Sentz and Richard Selby, playmates and boys of the neighborhood will serve as pallbearers. Interment will be in the Mt. Carmel cemetery, Littlestown.

PLAN MORE MEETINGS

Fewer county wide meetings and more community meetings were recommended by a committee of 15 gathered Friday evening at Bigler-ville for a discussion of the coming year's Adams County Agricultural Extension association activities. The meeting, conducted by Assistant County Agent Ira N. Dunmire, was the first of five regional meetings to be held throughout the county to discuss plans for the year.

The government owns slightly more than 2,500 acres of the local battlefield which comprises 16,000 acres. For many years the Park Service has sought funds to purchase additional acreage which it considers essential for proper preservation of this historic area.

Washington, Jan. 28 (AP)—Secretary of the Interior Chapman says the United States needs more national parks, especially along oceanfronts and lakeshores.

He says the federal government also ought to speed up the acquisition of some 550,000 acres of private lands now inside the national parks.

At the rate of land acquisition with funds now available, says Chapman, the process will take at least 100 years. The private lands tend to become more expensive as time passes, and there is the further danger that some of their park values may be lost if they remain in private hands.

Chapman recently aired his views on National Park service problems before the National Conference on State Parks. In general his policies follow those of his predecessor, J. A. Krug. Like Krug, he stresses the point that there shall be no encroachment upon the parks "unless the welfare or the safety of the nation requires it."

He has gone further than Krug in indicating that where rival recreational and water-use needs of an area are equal, he may be on the side of Interior's Reclamation bureau against Interior's Park service.

"Where the construction of a reservoir, dam or transmission line would damage scenic, scientific, historical or recreational resources of greater value to the nation than the economic benefits anticipated, the greater value should be protected," Chapman says.

"However, we cannot fail to recognize that the needs of a rising population and an expanding economy are giving increased importance to our programs for development and utilization of the nation's limited water and other natural resources."

Chapman says that all the lands now used by federal agencies, states or communities for parks and recreation are inadequate for an increasing—and increasingly leisured—population.

Millions of full-color American Wildlife Conservation stamps, depicting birds, fish, mammals, trees and flowers, will be mailed into every state in the nation to commemorate the 13th annual observance of National Wildlife Restoration Week, March 19-25.

The mailing campaign of the new issue of 1950 Wildlife stamps started January 3, and will continue through Wildlife Week and longer if necessary. This campaign is conducted annually to finance the educational activities of the National Wildlife Federation and its affiliated organizations throughout the country.

Wildlife stamps were introduced in 1938, following the late President Roosevelt's proclamation dedicating the Nation's first Wildlife Week observance. New wildlife subjects are selected each year. To date the collection totals 484 different wildlife subjects. Leading wildlife artists are chosen to paint the original posters. J. N. (Ding) Darling, nationally-known artist, cartoonist and conservationist, a founder of the National Wildlife Federation and today its honorary president, 13 years ago foresaw the educational value of Wildlife Stamps. He did the original art work, which has resulted in wide-spread demand for these attractive miniature wildlife pictures.

This year's full sheet of stamps comprises 36 different wildlife subjects, all from the brush of Walter Weber, noted wildlife artist of Vienna, Virginia, and until recently art consultant to the Federation.

Co. Schools Will Mark Special Days

Adams county schools will observe Heart Campaign month during February and National Freedom Day, February 1, County Superintendent of Schools J. Floyd Slaybaugh said today.

Governor H. Duff has issued proclamations concerning both periods asking that suitable observances be held in the schools, the county superintendent noted.

Heart Campaign month has been set aside as the period the annual American Heart Fund drive is held to raise money for research into heart disease, the governor's proclamation declares.

National Freedom day is being held to mark the 85th anniversary of the signing by President Lincoln of the resolution to the states for ratification of the thirteenth amendment which proclaims that servitude may exist in the United States.

Dr. M. P. Ranbise, leading physician in the department of medicine and the medical school at the Miraj, India, medical center, was the speaker Friday evening at a meeting of the Auxiliary of the Adams County Medical society at the County club here. Members of the Medical society were guests of the Auxiliary for the session.

Medicine in India could not have reached the point it has without Christianity, Doctor Ranbise said. Not only Christians, but non-Christians go to the Christian hospitals in India because "only the Christian gives hope as well as medicine," he noted.

The tremendous need for physicians in India was pointed out by the visiting doctor who said that there is only one physician for every 10,000 persons in India.

On Tour Of U. S.

Progress has been slow, he noted, adding that the progress made in the past 100 years could be duplicated now in 10 years. Much of the necessary work of the medical centers, such as the one at Miraj, consists of teaching cleanliness, vaccinating and teaching other public health measures and in general carrying the story of medicine to the people of the country, he said.

Following his formal talk, a long question period was held during which the local doctors asked about details of medical practice in India.

The Indian doctor is currently on a four-month tour of the United States under sponsorship of the Presbyterian Foreign Mission board.

Mrs. Raymond F. Sheely, president of the auxiliary, presided. Hostesses include Mrs. R. W. Gifford, Mrs. J. J. Knox, Mrs. C. H. Johnson, Mrs. Sheely, Mrs. J. J. Baker and Mrs. David Stoner.

RESCUE PLANES OF TWO NATIONS COMBING YUKON

Edmonton, Alta., Jan. 28 (AP) — Rescue planes of two nations focused today on the mountainous, icy, blizzard-infested Yukon territory in search of a U. S. Air Force C-54 which vanished two days ago with 44 persons aboard.

Among the 36 passengers were a mother and her child, military dependents. Others were servicemen returning to the states. Eight crew members manned the big four-engine transport on the ill-fated flight.

The C-54 disappeared Thursday afternoon about two hours after leaving Anchorage for Great Falls, Mont., a waystop enroute to its home base at Briggs Field, El Paso, Texas.

Scores Of Search Craft

Air rescue services of the United States and Canada joined forces and sent scores of search craft to the bleak area of craggy peaks, frozen swamps and muskeg, snow and ice.

At Whitehorse, from which the hunt is being directed, bad weather forced officials to call back all planes last night after a full day in the air. The search is a dawn to dusk proposition and the hours of daylight are few.

Names of the eight crewmen have been revealed. The others will not be released until 48 hours after next of kin have been notified.

Meager Clues

Clues upon which to base the search are meager. The plane last reported by radio as it passed Snag on the Alaska highway aerial route. Snag is about 20 miles into the Yukon from the Alaska border and about 1000 miles northwest of Edmonton as the crow flies.

An early report of signals being seen on the highway at Watson lake, many miles farther south in British Columbia, have been discounted. Probably a distressed truck on the lonely Alaska-Canada road, search officials say.

Virtually anywhere the plane might have landed would mean an arduous trip through difficult country to reach help. The plane is equipped with emergency supplies of food and clothing for forced landings. So are the planes joining in the perilous search.

Washington, Jan. 28 (AP)—President Truman's refusal to comment on the perjury conviction of Alger Hiss brought fresh Republican demands today for a new Congressional investigation into the case.

"If Mr. Truman won't make any answers," said Rep. Velde (R-Ill.), "it's up to Congress to seek some of their own."

Velde, a former FBI agent, is a member of the House un-American activities committee. It was that group's investigations into communist espionage activities that turned up the evidence which resulted in the indictment of the former State Department official and his conviction last Saturday.

New York, Jan. 28 (AP) — Secret Service agents, posing as traders in the bogus-money market, cracked a counterfeit ring Friday, and seized $200,000 in phony bills.

Four men were arrested last night and today after their operations were traced from Los Angeles to New York, where they allegedly planned to put the fake money in circulation.

CHARLES WILL MEET BESHORE

New York, Jan. 28 (AP) — Ezzard Charles, the NBA heavyweight champion, is going to defend his title in New York state where he is only a "logical contender."

Charles signed yesterday to meet Beshore of Harrisburg, Pa., in a 15-round at Buffalo, February 28. It's okay with the New State Athletic commission but you can't mention title.

In New York, Charles is only a "logical contender." Across the river in New Jersey, he's the champ. It's all a little confusing.

This isn't the first time, either. In fact, Charles made his first "defense" in New York city against Gus Lesnevich last summer. If Ezzy loses he'll "blow" his NBA title.

Beshore, 26, sparred with Charles at San Francisco last fall when Ezzy was getting ready to fight Pat Valentin. Maybe Beshore thinks he found a hole in Charles' defense.

"I like to go in and fight," said Beshore, summing up his style. Whatever he does, it didn't work against Lee Oma who won two decisions over him in the last two months. The last was a close one. "This proves my guy is a real fighting champion," said Jake Mintz, Charles' manager, "we'll fight anybody, anytime."

South Penn Loop 1st Half Scoring

The Chambersburg Trojans, winners of the first-half title in the current Southern Pennsylvania conference race, will be the team to beat during the second half, which starts next Tuesday. The Trojans are assured of at least a playoff spot at their seventh straight crown.

The charges of Coach Lowell W. Schleicher closed the first half in a blaze of glory and are now 91 points ahead of opponents in the margin of victory and lead in both the team offensive and defense, according to figures released today by Vaden P. Richards, statistician of the Southern Pennsylvania Sports Writers association.

Kenny Deardorff, Gettysburg forward, finished the first half with a comfortable margin in the individual scoring race but, unless he gets even hotter in the second half than he did in the first, Maurice Reichenbach's loop record of 274 points last season will stand.

GHS SMOTHERS DELONE QUINT BY 60-35 SCORE

Displaying its best scoring punch of the campaign, the Gettysburg high cagers scored an easy 60-35 victory over Delone Catholic Friday evening at McSherrystown.

Kenny Deardoff, Dick Harriel and Ted Ford were the big point men for the Warriors, netting 21, 17 and 12 points, respectively.

The victory marked the eighth against six setbacks for the locals and halted a three-game winning streak by the Squires who recently had shown signs of great improvement.

Only in the first period did the Delone team furnish the locals keen competition although the Warriors led 17-12 at the close of the round. Deardoff landed a trio of goals and a foul, Ford a pair of goals and a foul, Kuhn a goal and foul and Harriel a goal to give Gettysburg its lead. Smith and Murren accounted for a pair of goals for Delone with Murren adding a foul and Liversberger a goal and foul.

Led by Harriel who looped four goals, the Warriors moved into a commanding 36-15 lead in the second quarter. Deardoff added a pair of goals and foul and Ford a pair of goals and free toss. Meanwhile the tight Gettysburg defense limited Delone to a goal and foul by Mumma.

Again in the third period Harriel landed seven points, Deardoff five and Ford two to hike the Warriors' margin to 45-22. Staub looped a pair of goals, Sheaffer one and Smith a free toss for Coach Jim Witmer's outfit.

Reserves of both squads played the greater portion of the final period.

Reserves Triumph
The Warrior reserves overcame a 10-6 deficit in the first period to take the preliminary game 32-24.

Next Tuesday Shippensburg will come here to open the second half race of the South Penn league. Delone meets St. Francis Prep at Spring Grove on Tuesday.

The Boiling Springs high cagers increased their lead in the Adams County league by upsetting York Springs 43-30 on the latter's floor Friday evening. The Bubbies, paced by Fisel, Diehl and Dromgold, led throughout. Earl Guise scored half of his team's points for York Springs on four goals and seven foul conversions. In the preliminary game the York Springs reserves won easily 31-16.

New Oxford handed Littlestown its sixth straight league setback by a 38-25 count on the winner's court. The game was closely contested for three periods until New Oxford went on a scoring period in the final quarter. Mummert and Gerriek, with 17 and 11 tallies, led their respective teams. In the opening game the New Oxford jayvees triumphed 28-15.

After battling to a 33-33 deadlock at the end of three periods, East Berlin hit the cords for 17 points in the final period to win 50-41 at Newville and thereby moved into third place. Mummert led East Berlin with 15 points. The Newville reserves copped the preliminary tussle 25-13.

Phoenix, Ariz., Jan. 28 (AP)—Jimmy Demaret, his golf as fancy as his clothes, defends a two-stroke lead in the $10,000 Ben Hogan open today and sees his luck returned.

The Ojai, Calif., veteran who hasn't won a tournament since beating Hogan in the 1949 playoff here, goes into today's third round with a 131, two strokes better than Johnny Palmer of Eadin, N. C.

Bantam Ben, the comeback man in whose honor they named this event, skidded over par figures yesterday and found himself with a 138, five strokes off the pace but not out of the running.

New York, Jan. 28 (AP)—Rocky Castellani's decisive win over slugger Ernie Durando of Bayonne, N. J., may have been the most costly victory of his budding career.

Dr. Vincent Nardiello, commission physician, disclosed after last night's Madison Square Garden fight that Castellani suffered a fracture at the base of the left thumb. The Luzerne, Pa., middleweight hope said it happened in the third round.

Melbourne, Jan. 28 (AP)—Louise Brough of Beverly Hills, Calif., won the women's singles title in the Australian tennis championships today, defeating Doris Hart of Jacksonville, Fla. Miss Brough won 6-4, 3-6, 6-4 in a match marked by several dropped services. Miss Hart was defending champion at the Kooyong courts.

The Waynesboro junior high basketball team took a twin bill from the Biglerville junior high teams Friday evening at Biglerville.

In the feature game the Waynesboro regulars got off to a 10-2 lead in the first period to win 29-23. Miller, Waynesboro, and Lower, Biglerville, each landed 11 points.

The Waynesboro reserves also got off to a fast start in the opening period at 12-4 and won the preliminary 30-19.

PITT IS SEEKING NEW GRID COACH

Pittsburgh, Jan. 28 (AP)—The University of Pittsburgh sought a new football coach today—but didn't anticipate much trouble in finding one.

Pitt Athletic Director Tom Hamilton, who on two occasions coached Navy, ruled himself out. "I have no desire for the coaching job," he said.

The Panther grid coach position became vacant yesterday—virtually by default—when Mike Milligan announced he had turned down a year-to-year contract. His present three-year pact expires officially on February 17.

"That means," Mike told newsmen, "I'm out of a job." He added: "I have no immediate plans. I just didn't ask for any particular length contract. I just wanted it for more than a year."

Hamilton, asked if Pitt might agree to Milligan's demands, replied firmly: "Mike has had a long time to decide. The matter is closed."

Hamilton pointed out that Milligan's sudden decision "might delay opening of spring practice." He said he has received no applications for the post so far "but there probably will be plenty by morning."

Hottest contender for the job reportedly is Johnny Michelson, now coach of the Pittsburgh Steelers of the new National-American football league.

By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.
New York, Jan. 28 (AP)—The other day George Mikan advanced the argument that pro basketball is tougher than the college game because "you never play eight games in ten nights in college like we're doing right now."

By way of rebuttal, Max Keiffer points out that in 1938 the Central Missouri State Mules of Warrensburg played five straight nights in the NAIB tournament, spent the sixth day driving 645 miles from Kansas City to Denver, then played three more days in the AAU tournament before they were eliminated.

Sign of spring: The arrival of the first major league training roster—from the Pittsburgh Pirates. . . . Word relayed from Washington quotes Howie Odell thus: "Seattle is my home territory now. I'm not looking for any other job anywhere. I'm interested in Iowa only because that's my home state."

HITTING THE BLOOD LINE
A couple of real sleepers turned up in the National Football league draft when Detroit named John Karras of Illinois and the Giants took Ebert Van Buren of Louisiana State. . . . Seems nobody else knew their "original" classes graduate this year. . . . It was the latter choice which caused George Halas to exclaim to the Eagles' Greasy Neale: "You let them get Steve Van Buren's brother. Why, any time I see a fellow who vaguely resembles George McAfee, let alone having McAfee's blood, I'm going to nab him."

SPORTSMENTION
Earl Hilligan, the American league publicist, points out that Ted Williams is No. 1 on the list of American leaguers who have lifetime batting averages over .300, but Ted's .352 leaves him behind Ty Cobb, Rogers Hornsby and Joe Jackson on the all-time list. We'll take Luke Appling, with .311 for 20 years. . . . Query from the U. of South Carolina: "How about a plug for Chuck Prezioso, who was first string football fullback, first string basketball guard and probably will play No. 1 on the golf team?" When Bud (Coach of the Year) Wilkinson was line coach at Syracuse U., he also served as head coach of hockey and golf. . . . The boys around the International Boxing club are moaning about lack of co-operation. Seems when Jim Norris' pug Nell K. won at Hialeah the other day, nobody knew she was starting.

Start To Return
Vets' Discharges
Harrisburg, Jan. 28 (AP)—The state Bonus Bureau has begun the task of returning original discharge or separation papers to veterans whose bonus applications have been processed.

The bureau said a form will accompany each returned paper, informing the veteran of the completion of the processing and that he will receive his bonus check after March 17.

Pennsylvania will pay up to $500,000 as a bonus to more than 1,215,000 veterans of World War II. Each veteran will receive up to $500, depending on the length of his domestic and overseas service.

The bureau reported that 33,430 of the 802,000 applications received to date have been processed.

Washington, Jan. 28 (AP)—House investigators gave up for the time being today trying to find out just who was responsible for licensing a 1,000-pound uranium shipment to Russia back in 1943.

The un-American Activities committee may try again late next week. It expects to bring back then the wartime head of the Atom Bomb Project, Lt. Gen. Leslie R. Groves, retired.

THE MIND'S PRISON
I don't like jails and never shall. I always have a sad feeling when I pass one. We still remain in the infant stage of civilization. "There but for the grace of God" may one of us might be! There is one prison, or jail, that I am in favor of—an invisible one in the mind, where bitter and unkind words might always be kept, and never be allowed to escape. But what a multitude of these words break out and do damage that often cannot be repaired! There are words that cut deeper than any knife, or that leave wounds that may never heal.

Those words of the poet came to me: "Kind words are more than coronets." What encouragement, what healing there is, to a word spoken in kindness, at the right time, to the right person. Simple words. Sincere words. How we all hunger for them at times. And if we hunger for them, then surely everyone does, for we are all akin in this human family of ours.

Look up those unkind words in your mind's prison, that you feel like letting loose into the world. Put padlocks on every door, and throw the keys away! That prison may mean your own security and your greatest happiness. What a joy it is to distribute words that give hope, comfort, and increased faith. Sent out upon errands their deeds keep flowering, seeding up endless areas. I had a friend in college whom everyone loved. Never did I ever hear an unkind word from his mouth. On the contrary it was a common remark for everyone who knew that chap, to say that he was forever saying kind things about everyone. I am sure that he lives today in the happy memory of a multitude.

Many of the highest officials about President Lincoln were wont to say most unkind and uncomplimentary things about him—but rarely, if ever, directly to him. He was too understanding. He smothered their very thoughts with magnanimous kindness. The things that he might have said, or thought, he kept securely in his mind's prison. No wonder that he has earned immortality!

To run the government, and he Knows everything that's wrong

At home and far across the sea.

If he were running things today,

To get this done he knows the way.
I know because he's told me so.

He has no college high degree,
I've heard he's failed in business

But fewer problems there would be
If statesmen followed his advice.

Sudden Freeze Might Mean Severe Losses

Harrisburg, Jan. 28 (AP)—Watch out for a sudden severe freeze!

That warning came Friday from the Penna. Horticultural association. It said a sudden drop to zero or even five above would work havoc among fruit trees.

A gradual decline in temperature, however, would cause no damage since leaf buds show no signs of green as yet.

"A gradual drop in temperature will 'toughen' the leaf buds that have started forming and thereby avert serious losses in the state's $20,000,000 fruit-growing industry," the association said.

Super-safe Highways
Bill Blank may be the world's worst automobile driver today but he's assured a place among the star performers in the motor era ahead. His guardian angel will be the super-safe highway, a highly ingenious course that will exert amazingly precise control over all cars, and their drivers, good, bad or indifferent.

Which way to turn, how fast to go, or when to slow down—now a matter of reading signs and trusting to personal judgment—will be answered automatically. Highway engineers say it is just a matter of combining some of the experimental controls which already are steering drivers to a safer course.

You won't have to look at the speedometer to know how fast you are traveling. Hydraulic dividers will separate traffic into lanes for certain speeds. Roads will be different in materials for special results. And for psychological reasons, constant changes in warning systems will be used. You won't even be able to blind an oncoming driver for his lights will automatically drop yours.

Note On Piston Service
Whether a resized, or reshaped, piston will collapse is something that need not bother the motorist who is faced with need for a motor overhaul. Pistons are placed in a steel sleeve of the required diameter and are then shot blasted from the inside. This re-forms the pistons and makes them as good as new. Aluminum and alloy pistons can be treated in this manner as successfully as are those of cast iron.

Keep These In Mind
In some cases of fuse trouble in the lighting circuit it has been found that replacing the dimmer switch solves the problem.

It is not true that fuel pumps with a booster pump for the windshield wipers are noisy in their operation. Any pump can be noisy. Sometimes the stroke is too long. . .

The car rides easier after you have stopped for dinner because tire pressures have dropped back to cold pressures again.

Before It's Too Late
If you have gone into the winter season with last year's antifreeze or something you have used all year by all means drain it off now and refill with new. This is no sales plus. The old anti-freeze collects corrosive salts by reason of the slow leakage of combustion gases into the cooling system past the cylinder head gasket. A litmus paper test is no sure way to determine how acid this solution is, and no less an authority that the United States Bureau of Standards says that the facilities needed for proper testing of used anti-freeze cost more than a new batch of the solution. Furthermore, these corrosive salts cannot be overcome by additions of new inhibitors.

It all boils down to this: if you wouldn't think of running the car without ever changing the water which you would expect any anti-freeze to be serviceable indefinitely?

Easier Parking Ahead

It's a curious commentary on motordom that just when we have begun to learn how easy it is to clean whitewall tires with steel wool and soap, along come the tire people with an anti-scuff black rubber ring around the union between the white and black portions of the tire. Not everyone can make the switch to the new type whitewall tire so, in the meantime, it is comforting to report that there is a new twin mirror device which enables a driver to see just how close the front and rear right side of his car are to the curbing. This certainly takes the agony out of parking with good tires and a modern fat car.

Anything Can Happen

Well, you certainly never can tell what that fellow ahead is going to do. The other day I was following a car that began moving to the left side of the road although there was no cross road nor even a driveway. My first thought was that the driver might be doing one of those wide swings to the left preparatory to cutting off to the right, but as we went along even this possibility vanished. But I was taking no chances, preferring to remain behind until something more definite showed up. Finally it came. The driver pulled all the way across the road and slowed down for a mail box. He was a rural mail carrier.

Around The Map

A lot of tire men are saying they greatly prefer synthetic inner tubes. . . Any motor can be fitted with a special cylinder head bolt which serves as an electric heater to facilitate cold starting. . . Owners of bright-colored cars should take note that some observers believe color lessens the risk of being involved in accidents. . . Watch for an end of the present styling of cars in about 12 months.

This Odd Motordom

The speed at which things change in motordom suggests a lot of strange possibilities. I'll tell you why.

The other day one of the new natural rubber inner tubes on my car developed a hole in its side, causing the shoe to go flat almost as rapidly as a blowout and costing me a pretty penny for a new shoe, tube and balancing. Only a short while ago we were crying because of having to use synthetic rubber for tires, yet after this experience with a new natural rubber tube I preferred to switch back to a synthetic tube. Synthetics do not leak air like natural rubber. The tire people agreed with me that I was also justified in taking another natural rubber tube from one of the car's tires and replacing it with a new synthetic.

But here's the payoff: When the new natural rubber tube came out there were no takers for it—not even at 50 cents!

Two To Remember

Those boots over the individual brake cylinders are intended to keep dirt out of the cylinders, so be sure they are clean and properly installed. This rule is especially important when checking over them for evidences of piston leakage.

It valves are ground up by a good mechanic using the latest equipment, and if proper consideration is given to the angle of the valve seats, there is nothing to be gained by lapping the valves.

Having Their Troubles

Q. The engine of my car seems to have stopped running. Spark is reaching the plugs and I have replaced the gasoline in the carburetor bowl. The choke closes fully. Battery is up. H. N. McB.

A. But the battery may not crank the engine fast enough to build up compression. Try being pushed in gear.

Q. Is it too late to have the car undercoated? I have had it 14 months. H. R. S.

A. Better late than never, but have the chassis well cleaned before ordering the job. Or the dealer will do the job for you.

Q. The accessories on my car run the battery down much too often. Can't get any higher output from the generator. Now what? H. R.

A. Better install a high output generator.

Q. I have broken two fan belts recently. Each one was of good quality and properly installed. How come? N. N. C.

A. You had better inspect the flanges of the pulleys. If one of these is broken or even rough it will inflict excessive wear on the belt.

Q. I have had the crankshaft carefully checked and it seems to be in good shape, yet several times I have burned out the No. 3 connecting rod bearing. There is no rod misalignment. Have you any suggestions as to how I can check this? Wm. L. K.

A. How about lubrication? It looks to me as if there is oil failure here.

Q. The engine of my car needs a lot of choking to keep it going properly. This is even when it has been warmed up. I have checked the carburetor float level. Ignition seems to be in good condition. J. F. D.

A. This looks like need for checking a very bad leak around the intake manifold system.

Q. I suspect that the poor performance of the engine of my car is due to a damaged heat riser tube, some exhaust gases getting into the intake. Is there any way to test this to make sure? G. K.

A. This can be done with a vacuum gauge. Hook up the gauge and watch the indicator when the motor is being cranked with ignition off. If the riser is burned the gauge will read about 5.

BANDITS TAKE SAFE, FURS, GEMS

New York, Jan. 28 (AP)—Bandits carted off a safe and furs and jewelry valued at $100,000 Thursday from the fashionable East Side home of Columnist and Cafe Owner Billy Rose.

Police said three men entered the four-story residence while Rose and his wife were away, tied up a Negro butler, and carried away a small safe containing the jewelry.

After Rose and his wife, the former Eleanor Holm, one-time swim champion, returned home, a check disclosed that a number of fur pieces also were taken by the robbers.

Rose said the loss might have been much greater had it not been that his wife wore much of her jewelry to a play premiere they attended last night.

He said the bandits left undisturbed a $500,000 collection of paintings, and $75,000 worth of antique silver.

Canadian scientists have developed a flameless match producing heat but no light, says the National Geographic Society.

Besancon, France, Jan. 28 (AP)—Six persons were killed and 15 others injured last night when two trains crashed into each other near here. Four of those killed were in the first coach of the train from Besancon. The two trains were on the single-track line between here to Yseul in eastern France near the Swiss border.

Bedford, Pa., Jan. 28 (AP)—The Pennsylvania State Association of County Fairs wants the state Legislature to legalize parimutuel betting on harness horse racing. Explosion Kills Miner; Injures 2nd

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Jan. 28 (AP)—A premature dynamite explosion at the Hudson Coal company's Delaware colliery Wednesday killed one miner and seriously injured another. The victim was Michael Nestorick, 31, Wilkes-Barre, father of four children.

William McGraw, 23, also of Wilkes-Barre, was taken to Mercy hospital with fractures of right arm and leg and extreme shock.

Elmer Williams, division superintendent for the company, said Nestorick and McGraw were engaged in driving a rock tunnel. They were preparing a hole for a "cut" when the dynamite exploded prematurely, he said.

Nestorick's father is a patient in Wilkes-Barre hospital for treatment of injuries suffered in an automobile accident a month ago.

EXPLOSION ON MARS SIGHTED

Tokyo, Jan. 28 (AP)—A young Japanese astronomer who never went to college says he sighted the "terrific explosion" on Mars which has excited astronomers the world over.

Tsunao Saeki, 32, has been keeping an optical eye on Mars for 17 years. He is highly regarded by two of Japan's greatest astronomers, Tadao Myrayama of Tokyo's Science Museum, and Dr. Hideo Hirose of Tokyo's Astronomical Observatory. "Saeki is one of Japan's best and most experienced Mars experts," said Murayama. Hirose echoed that opinion.

Saeki said in a telephone interview from Osaka, where he watches Mars, that he was not certain the explosion he saw was of volcanic origin. "There are no accurate data on such phenomena," he said.

Saeki said he "presumed" the greyish cloud was of volcanic origin because it was of a different color from clouds usually observed around the planet. He never before had seen grey-colored clouds there.

Saeki said he was alone January 16 when he sighted the cloud which has excited astronomers abroad. As far as can be told by a brief check in Japan, he was the only Japanese astronomer to note it. The surface where Saeki reported the blast was turned away from astronomers in the United States.

Believe Transit Strike Is Averted

Philadelphia, Jan. 28 (AP)—Barring a last stage upset the strike that threatened to deprive Philadelphia of its public transit February 11 has been averted.

Union and management representatives Thursday agreed to a compromise proposal under the prodding of Mayor Bernard Samuel's fact-finding and mediation board.

Albert M. Greenfield, chairman of the mayor's board, announced the agreement after a meeting during the afternoon and evening in close secrecy. He called it a down-the-line compromise accord between Local 234 of the CIO Transport Workers union and the Philadelphia Transportation company (PTC). The union had empowered a strike board to set a strike for February 11 unless an agreement was reached by February 1.

A PTC strike last February lasted 10 days.

FIVE BABIES BURN TO DEATH

Lawton, Okla., Jan. 28 (AP)—Five small children burned to death alone in their flimsy two-room frame home here Thursday. The structure's only door accidentally became locked and thwarted frantic rescue efforts by their 23-year-old mother.

Seven persons escaped unhurt from another two-room hut jammed against the burning building.

The victims, ranging from two months to six years old, were the children of Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Young.

Mrs. Young said she stepped out into the yard to get water from a hydrant and stopped a few minutes to talk with a neighbor. Then the frantic screams from her children brought her racing to the door, only to find the inside wooden latch had dropped into place.

She tried to reach the crying children by breaking windows, but each time the heat drove her and helping neighbors back.

Their father, a 32-year-old truck driver, was at work when the tragedy occurred.

By LYNN WESTLAND

Chapter 13

It had been a busy day for Valse. He was riding with Wanda Daniels, acquainting himself with the 64, which he thought he needed to know to help run it.

"I suppose the Indians have helped themselves to some of your beef?" he suggested.

"Plenty, I guess," Wanda agreed. "We'll stop that—now. But they weren't the big trouble. Some of my neighbors, I think, have run a long loop."

"You any particular suspicions?" Valse asked. "The Gun?"

She shook her head, a look in her eyes for a moment which puzzled Valse.

"No, I don't think the Gun has been responsible," she denied. "As far as just who—I really don't know. I got rid of a crooked foreman, that has pretty well stopped. Of course after that it was like picking a chicken that had already been eaten. Not enough left to bother with."

They both fell silent, riding back, now, toward the ranch buildings. It took courage to do what she had dared to do, and he found himself admiring her for it. Despite that, she was as womanly as she had kept to crinoline and a rocking chair on a porch—perhaps more so, he decided.

"So you haven't had many friends here?" he probed.

She shook her head.

"Not many. I'm not fond of the place. It has been grand, though. It didn't make any difference to her I don't know that she's ever done it in town, but out here, when we were alone, she's ridden in levis the same as me—and liked it."

Valse's eyes darkened at the thought of Saralee. It still was a deep, rankling hurt inside that, having known him as she almost certainly had, she had refused to acknowledge him, even to talk to him.

"Saralee's grand person," Wanda repeated. "And don't think too harshly of her. I'm sure that she still loves you."

"Loves me?" Valse repeated. "When she wouldn't even acknowledge me? And is aimin' to marry Zachary?"

"I know how it appears," Wanda admitted, her eyes dark. "But there's a misunderstanding somewhere—a terrible one. I don't know just what it is, but I'm certain that it's there. And while we're on that subject, what about that marriage? Are you going to let it happen?"

"Should I interfere, if that's what they both want?" he countered.

Her own answer was just as puzzling.

"I was supposed to be bridemaid," she said. "But I'm not going to be there at all, now."

Valse had a feeling that she wanted to say more, but evidently the words were not easy to find, and silence fell between them. Almost before he realized it, they were back at the barn, turning their horses into the corral, going in to join the crew at supper.

The whole crew, Valse observed, were in high good humor, now that grass had been found for the herd. Though some of their high spirits might spring from the expectation that there would soon be some direct action to get the Gun back.

But presently they fell silent, sensing the mood that was upon Valse, and devoted themselves to the food. He was considering his next move. Since Marsh and Huff had returned from their last ride, it was certain that Zachary would be apprehensive, and so he would probably be taking precautions. Well, let him!

He had made his threat to Zachary; that he would kill him before permitting him to marry Saralee. Intervening events had strengthened his resolve.

The meal was half over when there came a hail from outside and, recognizing the voice, Valse listened, incredulously. Then he was out of his chair and outside, to look into the seamed, weather-worn face of a big man, who still walked erectly for all his bowed legs, to stare into beaming blue eyes below a thatch of hair as white as his own, and to have his hand gripped in a clasp like that of a steel trap.

"B' golly, ef'n it ain't Trib Valse himself!" the newcomer boomed. "Lightenin' up here a little, ain't yuh, Trib, same's meself, but dang it comes ef'n y' ain't the same ol' Trib! Heard y' was here, and rode round 't' say I'm glad to see y'. B' golly, but I am!"

"Bob Fortescue!" Valse grinned, delighted. "You old flea-bitten rascal, you! You're a sight for sore eyes!"

Here was something to warm his heart. Fortescue had been a friend in the old days, but Valse had not looked for him on his return, having heard a rumor to the effect that the old puncher had been out of the country for some years. But reports to the contrary, here he was in the flesh. And what was more to the point now, he made no bones of the fact that, white-haired or not, Trib Valse was still Trib Valse. There had not been an instant's hesitation in his greeting.

"Come in and have supper," Valse went on. "Where'd you come from?"

"Don't mind ef'n I do," Fortescue accepted. "C'n use a little stuffin' under the belt." They talked for a while, eagerly, other things forgotten in the pleasure of their reunion.

Despite a warm invitation to stay at least for the night, Fortescue insisted that he had to be getting along without delay.

"Supposed t' be tendin' t' some business," he said. "I'll be gettin' round 't' town in a day or so," he promised. "Tell everybody they're cravin' n a pack of skallyhooin' coyotes. Course y' Trib Valse. Know y' anywhere. Gotta ride now. See y' then, Trib."

Grinning, he climbed into the saddle again, waved, and was gone. Warm, Valse watched his departure. He would have preferred to have had his old friend spend the night, but perhaps this was just as well. For he had urgent business to attend to tonight, and now there would be nothing to hamper him.

Chapter 14

Outwardly, Valse gave no indication of his intention. He sat around with the others, while the dusk deepened and stars made a pattern of thin gold dust scattered across the sky.

When they prepared for bed, and the lights went out, he did the same. When his ears assured him that they were all asleep, he slipped from his bunk, crossed to the door, and let himself out, stopping outside to pull on his boots.

Valse saddled a horse and rode away, headed for the Gun. He intended to find Zachary, even though he might have guards in the way. He'd waken him, if he was asleep, and give him a chance at his own gun. The thing would be fair. But he would kill Zachary tonight, of that he was perfectly certain. Zachary might kill him, too. There was always that chance; he knew Zachary for an excellent shot. But in his present mood, the risk did not worry him.

He was going down a slope now, his horse hidden in the trees, its hoofs soundless on the deep carpet of pine needles. Ahead, a couple of hundred yards across, was an open meadow.

Something moved in the shadows beyond him, and Valse pulled his horse to a stop with an involuntary gesture. It stood, not even shaking its head, as though as well aware as himself that something alien was abroad here tonight. He was about to go on over the ridge he waited, knowing that there was danger somewhere, where came a hand.

And then he saw what it was, and felt like chucking in his relief. Fifty yards to the side, a man had ridden out of the trees and headed now across the moonbright meadow, going in the same general direction that Valse was taking. At that distance there was no mistaking Fortescue. His battered old hat, long since shapless and colorless, was pushed far back on his head, so that the snow white thatch of his hair was clearly visible.

Evidently he had been taking it easy, traveling slowly after leaving the ranch. In his relief, Valse was about to spur to join him, and he was already opening his mouth for a hello, when a louder sound froze the sound in his throat.

From another point, halfway around the meadow, close to the little creek, a gun blasted savagely. Even while the echoes ran down the line of hills, progressively fainter, Valse saw Fortescue lift in the saddle, as if trying to stand up. His body twisted convulsively at the shock of the heavy bullet, feet kicking.

For a moment Valse was shocked with surprise and the horror of it. He was the danger that he had sensed, and he knew that his first instinct had not been in fault. Here was murder, cold-blooded murder, and he had a swift suspicion that it had been directed against himself, that someone had known, or had at least guessed, that he would be heading tonight for the Gun, which lay beyond in the same direction. And Fortescue had been the innocent victim of error. Someone, seeing his thatch of white hair, had probably supposed that that hair identified Valse.

Valse's eyes shifted to where the gun-shot had come from, and as he watched, he saw the brush stir. Then a man rode out from among the trees into the open meadow. Incredulity flooded Valse for a moment. For this man, bareback upon a spotted cayuse, was an Indian. A young brave, holding a revolver in his hand from which Valse fancied that he could still see a thin curl of smoke.

That had been good shooting, for an Indian; few of them were much good with a gun, more particularly a six-gun. Not that the shot had been too difficult, at that range, upon an unsuspecting target, and fired as it was from ambush. The unbelievable thing was that it should have been an Indian who had done the shooting. But the pertinent fact was that it had been done, in cold-blooded fashion, and Fortescue was his friend. Valse urged his horse ahead. It broke out of the fringe of trees, and he saw the startled look which the Indian flung his way. Then, instantly, the Indian knew his own pony around and was heading back for the shelter of the brush.

Valse yelled at him to stop, and saw the spotted cayuse break into a run. He perked his own gun and snapped a hasty shot, mostly in warning, and saw the brush swallow horse and rider.

Rage choked Valse, and his impulse was to pursue. But he knew the nature of the country beyond, and realized that it would be almost impossible to overtake the fugitive in the night. He hesitated, then swung his horse about to where Fortescue lay sprawled.

One look, once Trib was out of the saddle, and even before he had quite reached Fortescue, was enough to assure Valse that the old cowboy was past any help.

Valse stood, not touching him, shaken with grief and rage. Fortescue had been one of his best friends, as he had proven tonight. Now he was dead, killed in as treacherous and cowardly a fashion as could be imagined, and the fact that the bullet might have been intended for Trib himself made it no better.

The puzzling thing was that the killer should have been an Indian. That seemed to argue that perhaps Fortescue had really been the intended victim.

So absorbed was Valse in the puzzle, so torn by the conflicting emotions which wracked him, that he did not hear the first sound of those who approached. Then he looked up to see men all around him: men on horseback, half a dozen of them. Rudd was at their head, and they were all of the Gun crew.

"You damned cowardly killer," Rudd said, between his teeth. "You'll swing for this!"

Chapter 15

The others were dismounting, and the now bright moonlight showed things with pitiless clarity. Valse looked at them, startled, his hand moving toward his own gun as he saw their hostility. But he checked it, for there were guns on him already, and to make a false move was to die.

"Bushwackin'!" Rudd growled. "Shot in the back!" He reached out suddenly, jerked Valse's gun from the holster, and broke it open. The newly fired, still pungent shell was there, and Rudd flipped it out in the palm of his hand for the others to see.

"That clinches it," one of them growled, and spat. "String him up!"

"Hold on, Rudd," Valse protested. "I didn't shoot him. It was an Indian who downed him, and I was shootin' at him!"

He got no farther. Two of them had grabbed him from behind, by either arm. While he struggled desperately but nearly helpless, to break loose, Rudd, bitter animosity blazing in his eyes, hit him full on the mouth—a savage blow which whipped his head back, bruising his lips, dazing him. A gun-barrel in the hands of one of the others, wielded as a club, smashed down on his skull at the same moment.

The sight of the gun-barrel gashed his skin; the crash of the barrel seemed to cause something to explode inside Valse's head. He slumped in the grip of the pair who held him, knees buckling, head a fiery ball of pain. He appeared to be out cold, and was nearly so.

Someone got a grip on his collar, and another took him a cork across the grass toward the trees. There was a faint sound of hooves out from the others, apart in the open meadow, a faint, limbless for the first twenty feet, then with a big grained limb thrusting out. Two lariats ropes were being tied together, then the end slung over this limb.

Valse's own horse was brought and held in place, for it was a little skittish about the whole proceeding. But Rudd was slow now to give the order to lift Valse into the saddle. Pory had shaken him at the beginning—the anger that any man feels at such a discovery as bushwack murder, and a greater passion which he had hardly understood.

Now that the first gust of it was past, he could think again, and Rudd's mind was in turmoil. For he knew now that this man they were preparing to hang was Trib Valse. It was the certainty of that, he knew, which had roused the old hatred in him to such an extent, and he was honest enough to realize that it was chiefly that hate, and not this other thing, that made him so desperately anxious to take his revenge upon him.

To hang a man for bushwack murder was logical and right. But was he doing it for that, or to satisfy his own ancient craving to kill an enemy?

Four of his five men had struck to the business in hand, without deviation. The fifth had taken no active part in it. Instead, he had swung back onto his horse and proceeded to make a slow circle of the meadow. Now he returned, looking down on the rest of them.

"Didn't he say that an Injun shot him?" he asked.

"You believin' any of that stuff?" Rudd asked scornfully.

"Yeah, reckon mebbe I am," the puncher nodded. "I found where somebody'd been, just inside the trees over there—where he stood to shoot, looks like."

"This hombre here, likely, one of the others interjected.

"Nope," he spat out, the frayed pin needle. "The killer, he come out into the open afterward, then turned tail and run. But I found a spatter of blood along his trail. Looks to me like mebbe this feller did shoot him, like he said—wined him. He got away—the Injun, or whoever he was."

There was silence for a moment, after this dispassionate summing-up. Rudd's nature was in conflict.

He stared, his face still flushed, but he knew that he had already made a decision. He hung out an arm angrily.

"Put him on his horse!" he ordered. "Take off that rope. We'll give him a chance to talk, and see about that blood. If he did it, we can still string him up later."

"Thanks for givin' me a chance, Rudd," Trib mumbled. "As for Fortescue—he was over at the 64 for supper. Told everybody there that I was Trib Valse. You can ask any of 'em, includin' Miss Daniels. Think I'd kill a man after that?"

"That's your story, eh? Well, we'll check—and if it don't work out, there'll be plenty of other hands anxious to pull on the rope that strings you up. Till that's proved, we ain't takin' no chances. We'll take you into town."

He was lifted into his own saddle, dirty and disheveled, his hands still tied behind his back.

The old animosity in Rudd was too strong to order him to be untied, despite the torment of the flies. With the others, he rode across the meadow to have a look at the spatter of blood. Rudd listened to what Valse had to say. His only response was a grunt, and then he turned and led the way toward town.

It was mid-forenoon when they came in sight of Lunden's. Valse had not known, and Rudd, engrossed in his own not too pleasant thoughts, was completely forgetful, the hour fixed for the wedding—that it had been set for 10 o'clock in the morning, here at the little church.

A considerable crowd of holiday-attired men and women had arrived, and were still coming. Since there was no regular preacher, one had just arrived from another town and dismounted, was still fumbling in his saddle-bags for his Bible.

Valse saw that, and then, looking handsome but a little apprehensive as his eyes swept over them, he saw Armin Zachary himself.

A lady looked up and saw the little cavalcade. She screamed, and others turned to look, and the face of Zachary went bloodless.

SAYS INDIA MAY BECOME LEADER OF WHOLE ORIENT

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(AP Foreign Affairs Analyst)

India's arrival at full statehood—complete in all respects as a sovereign republic which is answerable to no foreign power—is symbolic of our rapidly changing times.

This transformation, involving more than three hundred million souls, has in the main been effected within the past generation. Even to those who have been privileged to witness this epic development at close range, it seems almost unbelievable that such a mighty change could happen within the compass of so short a time.

I'm taking you back to 1918-17 when I made my first visit of several months to India.

Things Of Wonder

The vast peninsula was presided over by the British viceroy as representative of the king-emperor, and the regime was far more regal than that in England itself. It had to be, because under it were some 630 native princes of unlimited wealth who had the power of life and death over their humble subjects. Such potentates bowed only to superior power and splendor.

The imperial durbar were things of wonder. Nowhere else ever had been seen such displays of opulence: the mountains of priceless jewels, the clothing cunningly woven of solid golden threads, the elephants caparisoned which were worth the ransom of a king.

Beneath this blaze of glory there were of course various strata of society which reflected the education and culture both of their own ancient India and of the outside world. But then came the lowly masses, the vast majority of whom always were hungry.

40,000,000 Pariahs

At the very bottom were some 40,000,000 or more Hindu untouchables who were so low that they didn't even have a place in the caste hierarchy within a week or 10 days—to marry the Indian director with whom the fell in love on Stromboli.

Her Hollywood attorney, Greg Bainter, gave the go-ahead to El Paso lawyers after negotiations with Dr. Lindstrom's attorney, Lawrence Brinn, in New York. The principals—Dr. Lindstrom here, and Ingrid and Rosellini in Rome—maintained silence.

The details of the divorce were in the hands of attorney William Cooke of El Paso who handled Merle Oberon's case last year.

The state law of Chihuahua, in which Juarez is located, provides for a quick divorce—a week to 10 days—when both parties consent.

HOPES REVIVED IN COAL CRISIS

Washington, Jan. 28 (AP)—The sudden revival of contract talks between John L. Lewis and soft coal operators raised tentative hopes today that some of the 88,000 striking miners might return to work next week.

Lewis and mine owners from the north and west agreed yesterday to reopen negotiations on Wednesday. Southern operators weren't included.

There was some talk that the United Mine Workers' chief intended to issue a direct order to the miners beforehand to restore peace in the troubled areas of western Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio.

Lewis' meeting with officers of the union's District 4 of Uniontown, Pa., last Wednesday was taken as an indication he was cracking down on leaders of the strike in that region.

However, at least three presidents of local units at Uniontown said they expect the walkout to continue on Monday.

Although the operators at first attached a lot of strings to resuming the negotiations which they broke off during the miners' October strike, there was no mention of conditions in the later telegrams which fixed the day.

Mysterious Blasts Close Coal Mine

Philipsburg, Pa., Jan. 28 (AP)—A terrific dynamite explosion wrecked the mouth of a small non-union coal mine at nearby South Philipsburg early today. Several other blasts have occurred there in the last two days.

Burgess Norman Bean, of South Philipsburg, said the blast at the opening of the Glen Coal company mine also broke windows in 15 or 20 homes nearby.

"It blew timbers right out of the drift and closed it tight," Bean said, explaining that earth and rock loosened by the explosion closed the opening to the mine.

A short time later, Bean said, another charge of dynamite destroyed a truck owned by Ellsworth Vaux, an employee of the Glen mine, operated by Ray and Charles Askey, brothers. The truck was parked in front of Vaux's home at South Philipsburg.

Burgess Bean said he heard two other explosions during the night, about an hour apart, but had been unable to find out where they were set off.

Philipsburg, Pa., Jan. 28 (AP) — Three dynamite blasts rocked the vicinity of two small non-union mines Thursday in nearby South Philipsburg. Slight damage resulted. Burgess Norman Bean, of South Philipsburg, said the first explosion caused $400 damage to the blacksmith shop and tool shed of the Glen Coal company's mine.

Artist Kurtz

With $5 in his pocket he went to the Pennsylvania station and paid $2.50 for a ticket to Philadelphia. Out of the remaining $2.50 he spent $1 for a room and bought a meal ticket at a restaurant.

Then he got a job. At first the firm, the Quaker City company, wouldn't believe that one so young could possibly have painted the samples Kurtz showed them, but he gave them a demonstration, and the job was his. Hard times came again, and Kurtz was laid off. With another man, he went into business of painting emblems on glass for $2 each, and before they knew it, they were "making good money." Kurtz saved his. His partner left and Kurtz went back to his old job with the Quaker City company.

Joins The Army

Then adversity struck again, but in a different form. His wife, to whom he had been married only four months, died, and Kurtz joined the army, a step which was to lead him around the world into many strange lands.

The army career provided several highlights. Kurtz and other volunteers trained at Governor's Island, N. Y. They were, he recalls, a "tough" outfit, when they left there with the Philippines as their ultimate destination.

"The army was different in those days," he says. "Girls wouldn't walk down the street or be seen with a soldier. They didn't want us in theaters." He remembers this as one of the highlights. He remembers also that the officers wouldn't let the soldiers out of their sight in San Francisco or in Honolulu, for fear they would desert. "We would have, too, in Honolulu," Kurtz says, and smiles.

Arriving in the Philippines, aboard the transport General Crook, which was still in use in World War II, the soldiers were taken several miles up a river to debark, "so that the march back will loosen up your searlers," they were told.

But as they waded ashore, bursts of rifle fire swept them, and several died and many were wounded. The transport "backed" down the narrow and shallow river to the town.

Visited Many Lands

Mr. Kurtz served in the army from 1901 to 1904. Then he went to Samoa, Bali, Tahiti, India, China, Afghanistan and Turkey. He became an illustrator for the British Times, and later with the Associated Press, and spent much time in Munich, Paris and London.

He returned to the United States in 1908, married again and had three children. His first two and his wife died, but one son is still living, near New York.

Kurtz was honored by the British for services during the last war. As a sketch artist for the old Philadelphia Inquirer, Mr. Kurtz once had to "cover" a coal strike in this state. He went by train, then he and others hired carriages to get to the coal fields.

As they approached a group of striking miners, they were mistaken for strikebreakers, and rocks and other missiles were thrown at them. Kurtz and the others grabbed their sketch books and ran toward the miners. "Quit it, we're your friends," they cried. When they told how they had come to the mines to reveal to the public the conditions under which the miners then lived and worked, they were received with open arms, Kurtz says.

"Monuments" Mark Career

Later Mr. Kurtz entered business for himself, and at one time employed 25 men in his New York shop. The depression forced him to give up this business, and he started again in one of the low rent districts
